

VODICE

Although Vodice was well known even from the period of the Roman Empire, it is first mentioned in 1402. The name Vodice was derived from the abundance of water with which the inhabitants then supplied the surrounding area.

LOCATION AND CLIMATE

Vodice is a small town near Sibenik, situated in a wide bay to which the Adriatic highway (the main Dalmatian highway) leads.

Vodice, like the whole coastal part of the region, has Mediterranean climate. The average temperature in winter (January) amounts to 9°C, and in summer (July and August) to 26°C.

The town has 2710 sunny days per year, whereas high summer temperatures and heat are decreased by the „Maestral” wind that blows in the direction sea - mainland.

HISTORY AND SIGHTS

Although Vodice was well known even from the period of the Roman Empire, it is first mentioned in 1402. The name Vodice was derived from the abundance of water with which the inhabitants then supplied the surrounding area.

The town walls from the period of Turkish invasion witness the history of this town, and the „Coric” tower is best preserved. From the other historical monuments, the Church of St. Cross from the 15th century as well as the Baroque parish church bearing the same name (in the centre of Vodice) should be emphasized. Near Vodice, on the hill Okit, the Church of the Lady of Carmel is situated, built by the inhabitants in the mid 17th century during the invasion of Turks.

VODICE TODAY

The inhabitants of Vodice are mostly engaged in tourism, in addition to which agriculture and fishing are also an important sector.

Numerous tourist objects, sports and recreational centres, organized boat and bus trips, as well as an interesting cultural and artistic offer contribute to the rich tourist offer of Vodice. The tourists can choose among various accommodation types – hotels, apartments, villas, private rooms and camps.

Pebbled beaches within the bay of Vodice and its surrounding area, among which the so called „Blue Beach” (with hotel complex) stretching to the west (all the way to the nearby small town Tribunj) is perhaps the most famous, will enable everyone to find a place for themselves, searching either for a dynamic atmosphere or privacy.
